Predictive Services Discussion:

Breezy north to northeasterly offshore winds this morning across northern and central California into tonight. The winds will spread south into southern California by noon today with a strong Santa Ana wind event as northeasterly winds gust as high as 80 mph and relative humidity falls as low as 6%. An upper low in the Southwest will bring widespread showers to the southern Rockies into the High Plains, with snow falling above 4,000 to 6,000 feet. A weakening cold front will move through the Northeast and into the Appalachians, with scattered light showers in the Northeast and more widespread showers in the Appalachians. Moisture will increase across the Southeast with scattered to widespread showers and thunderstorms. Cool, but dry conditions are forecast across the Northwest eastward into the northern Plains.
